The Ad Valorem Scheme.

Senator Mills, who had a principal part in making the senate tariff bill, declares for ad valorem duties before any other. In his opinion a duty laid on the value of an imported commodity is the perfection of a fair and altogether lovely thing, while a duty on the quantity is an abomination.

In the bill which the Texas senator helped to make are two or three hundred of these specific abominations, but there, as Mr. Mills explains, to give the bill a chance to get through the senate. If he had his way there would be no specific duties. He would have all duties laid on the value.

Under the bill this value is to be the value of the commodities in the principal markets of the country from which they come. Appraisers must know these changing values and keep tab on the exporting and importing consignment, which experience has shown to be a thing of wondrous elasticity, accommodating itself to the exigencies of trade as water seeks its level. The importing interest much prefers the ad valorem system, by which it is able to reduce any tariff rate provided by Congress. It always has been so and always will be so.

Until now no secretary of the treasury of any party, except Robert J. Walker, Democrat, has favored ad valorem duties as the general principle of a tariff system. Secretary Manning and Secretary Fairchild in Presidents Cleveland's first term were strongly opposed to it.

The specific duty, laid on the quantity, is the sure means of reaching most imported articles. In some cases it is wise to compound the duties, laying on the same article a duty which applies to the quantity and another which applies to the value. Low duties as well as high duties may be levied in this way. A compound duty may have an ad valorem equivalent of 10 per cent or 100 per cent. In the McKinley act the duties are arranged to accomplish the two objects of raising revenue and of protecting home industry, and both ends were accomplished.

In his denunciation of specific duties as being irredeemably bad Senator Mills seems to forget that there is no other kind of duty in the British customs tariff, for which he has, of course, great admiration and to the like of which he hopes his party will come in time.

Great Britain does not lay one ad valorem duty. Of the nineteen dutiable articles in her tariff schedule yielding $100,000,000 of revenue every one is taxed on the pound, the gallon or the hundredweight. Value does not enter into it in a single case. Great Britain is after revenue and takes the most direct and surest way to get it.

It is significant that in the pending tariff bill the duties on sugar, rice and peanuts are not ad valorem. Every one of them is specific. The southern Democrats know what they want with respect to these articles and they take the most direct and surest way to get it.

On joint ballot the Rhode Island legislature will be Republican by ninety-four majority. The whole body will be composed of 103 Republicans, five Democrats and one Independent. This legislature will elect a United States senator. The legislature chosen before this was dead-locked between the two parties.

Our Country—Singular or Plural.

In the heat of debate Senator George permitted himself to refer to the United States in the singular number, an awful blunder for a state rights Democrat from Mississippi. The senator hardly started with the offending number of the verb "to be," the official reporter carried it through the speech of the Mississippi senator so that there might be grammatical consistency in the gentleman's remarks.

To this the Mississippi senator objects as making him guilty of political inconsistency. He wishes it understood that in his view the United States are. To say the United States "is" outrages all his notions of the sovereignty of the states—swallows up the states, so to say, in one great and glorious national whole; which is not at all the Democratic idea down in Mississippi.

Senator George quotes the constitution as using the name of the country invariably in the plural; which is true. From this he draws the conclusion that any other use of the name is unconstitutional; which is amusing. Whether we shall say, the United States "is," or the United States "are," is not a matter in which the constitution governs us. It is a matter of taste and conception.

If we conceive the name of the country to cover a national solidarity, as a good many Americans like to do; if we have more pride in the nation as a whole than in any part of it, as many of us have; our taste is likely to turn to the singular use of the country's name.

While the doctors are disagreeing here's a health to Our Country—Singular or Plural!

What has become of the Democratic haste to pass the tariff bill? There are Democrats in the senate who do not seem to be in even a little hurry about it.

Business on a Solid Foundation.

One of the continuing phenomena of the times is the competition of merchants with habitual money-lenders for the short supply of commercial paper that is offering. This competition comes from men who in times of active trade would be in the market as borrowers. There is not business enough to employ their capital in their own lines and they go outside to turn an honest penny.

This is an indication of not only a lack of business but of commercial strength among business men, a feature of the months of depression which has shown itself generally over the country and shored up confidence under very adverse circumstances.

The further we go the more clearly it is seen that the prosperity of the country was not delusive, but rested on a solid basis, giving it power of resistance that has stood it well in hand since the evil days has come. This same solidity has its reassuring effect as we face the possibilities of the future.

SOMETHING seems to have blown the Mugwump clean out of Rhode Island. He used to be very much in evidence there.

Imported Labor Under Contract.

So far as the facts appear it is not just to censure those who have made previous investigations of the charge that the contract labor law was violated by bringing to Wheeling German potters under contract.

The men alleged to have been imported were not ready to make any revelations. Now, being dismissed from the company's service, they say that they came over under contract and had their passage paid for them. An investigation which has the co-operation of these men is quite different from one which finds them on the other side.

The contract labor law is a wise measure, one that should be respected by employers and enforced by the government. The explanation made by the company, given in another column of the INTELLIGENCER, does not show that the company is culpable. It appears that by agreement a test case was to be made which it was not certain that the law covered.

Thus is the way it strikes the faithful New York Herald, which helped to put the Democratic party in power, indeed claimed most of the credit: "If the income tax be not killed and the Wilson bill passed very soon the Congress elected next November will probably be similar in political complexion to Rhode Island's new general assembly." The tariff bill cannot pass with the income tax left out. Make up your mind to that.

As compared with this time last year the circulation has increased by $88,000,000, being now in round numbers $1,700,000,000, which the treasury estimates to be a per capita of $24.85. There is no scarcity of money. The scarcity applies to work and wages. Money is a drug in the market. So is labor. The connecting link of confidence is missing.

The box-car advance of the industrial army which has reached Washington—and which wants it understood that it has no connection with the tramping outfit—shows up well with a few combs, some soap, three razors and seventy-five cents. Persons provided with these evidences of an advanced civilization are entitled to great respect.

This is the day set for Senator Hill's celebrated great forthcoming speech on the tariff. He will hammer the income tax, of course. For the rest the accomplished New York statesman will dodge. You won't know from that speech whether he will vote for or against that bill. Senator Hill is a politician.

SENATOR MURPHY, silent partner of Senator Hill, thinks the tariff bill may be passed by next November. That will be in the melancholy days, the saddest of the year. There is something very impressive in the falling of the leaves.

What party will Judge Gresham join next? The Democratic party will soon be out of business and is not in love with him anyhow. If he comes back to the Republican party he will have to serve in the ranks.

It is tear-compelling to read in our esteemed Democratic contemporaries that "it will blow over soon." So it will—blow over the whole country and blow the tariff-butcher party out of business.

An able writer tells how to cultivate a private kitchen garden. He misses his opportunity by failing to recommend that the private kitchen gardener buy his vegetables ready made.

It is understood that the President will urge Congress to repeal the tax on state bank circulation. Why not? The Democratic platform pledges the party to do that.

The best advertised man in the country to-day is Coxey, and it isn't costing him a cent. Coxey has good reason to be grateful to the "hiring press."

BREAKFAST BUDGET.

The town of Essex, Conn., is the home of many old people. From a canvass, says a correspondent in the Hartford Courant, there are shown to be some 100 persons over seventy years old, about forty over eighty, and three over ninety, the oldest one being ninety-five, which is speaking well for the health of the town out of a population of 2,000.

An anti-tobaccoist of Middletown, N. Y., who went about the streets smatching pipes and cigars from the mouths of smokers, claimed, when hauled before a magistrate, that he had a right to breathe a smokeless atmosphere. The judge, desiring to insure him this privilege, had him confined in prison.

The Rev. Peter J. O'Callaghan, who preached in Appleton chapel, Harvard University, on Sunday evening, can claim the distinction of being the first Roman Catholic priest to lecture at the regular services in the great American university. Father O'Callaghan graduated from Harvard in '88.

An old law in Paris, which forbids kissing in public places, was enforced the other day against a cabman who kissed his wife in the street after a week's absence from home. He was fined $5 and paid it with a smile, remarking that it was well worth it.

John Ingram, of West Chester, Pa., has come into possession of an old English spit, with clock work attachment for turning a fowl while roasting before the fire. This relic had lain for over a century in the loft of an old mill in Upper Oxford township.

British engineers are in Egypt endeavoring to make a reservoir for irrigating purposes on the Nile at Assouan, which would submerge the celebrated island and temple of Philae. The proposition is meeting with much opposition abroad.

PERSONAL POINTS.

The only three men living who were associates of George W. Jones, whose ninetieth birthday was celebrated Wednesday in Iowa, which he first represented in the United States senate, are Robert C. Winthrop, of Massachusetts, ex-Senator Field, of Michigan, and Jas. W. Bradbury, of Maine.

Steele Mackaye, the actor, left the manuscript of a novel entitled "The Revelations of May 8, 1868," which was shown to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll and other literary critics, who pronounced it good. It will probably be published soon, and a dramatized version will be put on the stage.

David Christie Murray, the English novelist, testified in a London court some days ago that whereas his income from his writings used to amount to over $12,000 a year, it had lately dwindled until he had to apply for pecuniary assistance from friends.

In the United States senate the oldest men are Morrill, of Vermont, who is eighty-four; Palmer, of Illinois, seventy-seven; Harris, of Tennessee, seventy-six; Pugh, of Alabama, seventy-four; and Sherman, of Ohio, and Hutton, of Virginia, seventy-one.

MISS POLLARD AN ACTRESS.

Breckinridge's Chief Counsel Says She Rivals Bernhardt—The Case a Stun upon Society.

CINCINNATI, April 8.—Major Butterworth, chief counsel for Breckinridge, arrived yesterday, having a lecture engagement. He does not think that Breckinridge is a ruined man. Said he:

"Neither Mr. Breckinridge nor his counsel have any excuse to offer for his conduct all the way through. Madge Pollard has carried out her threat to expose him. In many respects she is the most remarkable woman I ever saw. There are only two actresses in the country better than she and they are Sara Bernhardt and Clara Morris. Her afflictions during the trial were perfect. She acted her part well, and she understood her case thoroughly. There was no part of it she did not understand. My impression of the case was that she was simply practicing for an entry upon the stage. Her human piteousness and stage actions were among the attractive features of the trial.

"In my opinion this suit has been the most unfortunate thing that has happened to this country. Thousands will not condone for the trying of the case. If I had been in Judge Bradley's place on the bench the case should not have been tried. It has poisoned the public mind and polluted society beyond repair. It is a most terrible thing socially. I have received hundreds of letters from mothers, wives and daughters not to permit Madge Pollard's standard of morality to be the accepted standard. I had a certain feeling of sympathy for her, the same as I have always had for any woman, no matter how unfortunate. I have hopes that Breckinridge will win the case, yet we had whole houses full of weapons which we could not use. If Colonel Breckinridge loses the case he has no money to pay anybody. Madge Pollard knew that; all she wanted was to expose him. She has done that.

"Now the speeches are to be heard. I presume that the case will end and the jury retire for its deliberations about Wednesday afternoon. After the decision of the jury I will give my version of the whole inside history of the case. If Breckinridge loses he will ask for a new trial; unsuccessful in that, he will appeal. He will not make a speech to the jury."

A SPIRITED GIRL.

Declines at the Altar to Marry the Man Her Mother Had Selected.

ENGLISH, Ind., April 8.—There was a queer turn to a wedding ceremony here last night in which Absalom Thayer and Miss Estelle Flagler were the principals. The minister had reached that point where he turned to the bride-elect and said, interrogatively, "You take this man to be your lawful husband, etc." When she answered: "No, sir; I do not. You are the first who has asked my opinion on the matter. Mr. Thayer has been courting my mother for more than a year. I thought it was herself that he wanted, but it appears that he only wanted her consent that he might marry me, and she concluded to compel me to wed him."

The minister then said: "This ends it. I have no power to bind any one one against his or her will." The crowd broke up, cheering for the spirited girl. The parties to the contract are Hungarians, who usually settle such matters for the children without consulting the children's wishes.

Four Big Successes.

Having the needed merit to more than make good all the advertising claimed for them, the following four remedies have reached a phenomenal sale. Dr. King's New Discovery, for consumption, coughs and colds, each bottle guaranteed—Electric Bitters, the great remedy for liver, stomach and kidneys, Bucklen's Arnica Salve, the best in the world, and Dr. King's New Life Pills, which are a perfect pill. All these remedies are guaranteed to do just what is claimed for them and the dealer whose name is attached herewith will be glad to tell you more of them. Sold at Logan Drug Company's drug store.

What Will Do It?

Medical writers claim that the successful remedy for nasal catarrh must be non-irritating, easy of application and one that will reach the remote sores and ulcerated surfaces. The history of the efforts to treat catarrh is proof positive that only one remedy has completely met these conditions and that is Ely's Cream Balm. This safe and pleasant remedy has mastered catarrh as nothing else has ever done, and both physicians and patients freely concede this fact. Our druggists keep it.

A WILSON BILL BASIS.
The Ensign Car Company Cuts Down Its Force and Wages.
Huntington Herald.

At last the expected, but unhoped for has come, and it certainly is not a favorable indication. For seven or eight months past the Ensign works have been practically closed, but most of the salaried men were kept in their positions at full pay, although they had little or nothing to do. This of course was a heavy and unnecessary expense to the company, and rather a surprise to many of those who were retained, but the inevitable has come.

Salaries were to-day adjusted on a "Wilson bill" basis. Nine members of the office force were placed on the "free list," and are now offering their services in the "markets of the world." Heads of departments and shop foremen were cut from 20 to 30 per cent.
